Dear Editor:

I wish to correct misinformation printed in the last issue which was sent to you by one of my "friends" and a classmate from 1980. While it is true that at the time of publication I was assistant director of public relations at Andrews University, I am not married, never have been, and certainly don't have three kids! I am enjoying my single life and am not working on a master's degree at the present time.

What an experience it has been, though, since that last issue came out. I have had telephone calls from all over the country expressing everything from disbelief to congratulations. My home church in Birmingham, Alabama, was even planning a group wedding present when they heard the news. (Too bad I had to tell them the truth; I could use some new sheets, towels and kitchen utensils.)

Well, the fact of the matter is that I have taken the position of director of public relations at Shawnee Mission Medical Center near Kansas City. I began December 3. The hospital has almost 400 beds and is located in a suburban area. My new address is 12504 W. 97th Terrace, Apt. 301, Lenexa, KS 66215.

Sending erroneous information to SOUTHERN COLUMNS did not add to the magazine's credibility, Alan Ruggles, but it certainly did add spice and excitement to my life. All in all, I don't think you should do it again.

Sincerely,
Mark Driskill

Alumni President's Message

Alumni Update

I am happy to report that there is a new sense of purpose on this campus among students and faculty alike. The college IS moving . . . and so is your Alumni Association. Consider the following:

■ In the last issue of the COLUMNS the BECA graphs showed the giving response of our challenged alumni. The Business Executives Challenge Alumni (BECA) fund has continued to expand, and your executive council recommended that $100,000 of this year's money go into the scholarship program.

■ At a recent meeting it was further voted to recommend that $100,000 go into the scholarship endowment program for each of the next 10 years. One million dollars from your gifts will assist the work-oriented student in these financially uncertain and insecure times.

■ The Board of Trustees for Southern College has voted the president of the Alumni Association to be an ex officio voting member of the Board. New ideas and suggestions from you, the alumni, can be taken directly before the Board, and Board actions affecting us can have more rapid dissemination to the membership.

■ The endowment program is growing. At a time when the world is asking if private education can survive, men of vision have set the machinery in motion to assure our continued operation under God. Approximately 60 percent of the $10 million goal has been pledged or already given.

We are looking for ways to be of expanded service to the alumni in the field. One suggestion being studied is an alumni directory with alphabetical, geographical, and years-attended listings. Another idea is an employment service that would inform interested individuals of teaching, nursing, and other professional opportunities. We need your input.

If we are to be of service to you, into what area should we be looking? Take time to communicate with the Alumni Office of Southern College. Your ideas are important to us. We must hear from you!

Your continued support and prayers are vital to the success of these important programs at "The School of Standards."

Dear Editor:

I wanted to mention that I have been reading with interest the letters about my little sister, Ruthi Shafer, after you printed the article about her powerlifting. I wish it would have been possible to include a picture of Ruthi when she is not lifting, since under the strain of a lift she does not look too great. She is still a beautiful woman and although her lifting has given her slightly larger arms and shoulders, she is still very feminine in appearance.

Although I do not share Ruthi's enthusiasm for powerlifting, I still respect her accomplishments and am proud of her for going "to the top" in whatever she has tried, including her business as a Prudential life insurance agent.

Dear Editor:

Thank you very much for the copies of SOUTHERN COLUMNS that I have received via my father, Dr. Lyndon D. Harder of Ooltewah, Tennessee.

Although adventurous and quite independent, I have found it most interesting (and I must admit, stimulus for sentimental ponderings) to read the tidbits about my former colleagues.

SMC/SC has been a positive contributor to my maturation, Christian growth, and knowledge of the world in general. I feel satisfied to see that the college continues to develop and advance successfully; I am proud to be an alumnus.

Writing from Europe, Bundesrepublik Deutschland (West Germany), I wonder how many of my friends and acquaintances are apprised of my current milieu, as I am informed of their present status by the help of your publication.

So, if you will indulge me a little self-centeredness: I joined the Army in December, 1982. My basic and specialized training were completed at Ft. Sill, Oklahoma. Presently I am serving a three-and-a-half year tour in West Germany in the beautiful southern area adjacent to Bayern (Bavaria)-Heilbronn in the state of Baden Wuerttemberg. Serving in a Pershing II missile firing battery of over 220 personnel, my duties are secretary for the Battery Commander and First Sergeant, and Battery Clerk. I am engaged to a German nursing student, Angelika Fegert, and we will be married in December of this year. Upon completion of my contract with the US Army in April, 1987, I will move back to the United States, pursue graduate studies in the medical field, and then re-enter the US Army Officers Corps as a hospital administrator.

Please continue sending SOUTHERN COLUMNS!

Sincerely,

Dear Editor:

I read with much interest your latest issue of "Those Who Walked These Halls" and felt you did a terrific job with that section of the SOUTHERN COLUMNS. In fact, the whole magazine was excellent.

I'm only a member of the Committee of 100, but enjoy keeping up with what happens at our college in Collegedale.

The three-story Opus 26 was assembled first in Oregon in the construction studio of John Brombaugh. The pipe organ is currently being reassembled and voiced in the Collegedale SDA Church. (Photo by Rosanne Olson)

Pipe Dream Comes True

The long wait is over . . . The crowd cheered as the two trucks rolled into the parking lot of the Collegedale Church and the choral group, Die Meistersinger, struck up a tune of thanksgiving. The organ had arrived.

Together the college and the Collegedale congregation had waited seven years for this organ while it was being painstakingly hand built by masters of the craft. A full three stories high, the Opus 26 is the largest tracker organ built in North America in this century, boasting 4,926 pipes and 70 stops, a significant fact because it is the number of stops, not pipes, that defines the scope of an organ.

Although it is not physically the largest pipe organ in North America, it is by far the largest tracker pipe organ. A tracker is built after the fashion of the great organs of Europe from the 16th and 17th centuries.

These organs have thousands of slender wooden linkages, known as "trackers," which connect the keys to the individual pipe valves, and the stops to the ranks of pipes. The music created by such an arrangement is different both technically and aesthetically from that produced by an electronic organ where the keys are connected to the pipe valves by wires and electrodes.

In spite of an electronic age that suggests the biggest and best organs should be products of electronic wizardry, many organ builders have fought the tide of modern technology and have returned to the craft that made the truly great sounds of the organs back in Bach's day.

John Brombaugh, the builder of the Opus 26, is one of these master builders who prefers the Old World sounds. He and his crew of technicians operate a workshop in Eugene, Oregon, where the Opus 26 was constructed and then disassembled for transport to Collegedale.

Although Brombaugh's firm is one of 20 currently producing tracker organs in America, he is probably one of the most sought-after builders. While other firms have teams of personnel who devote their full attention to one particular stage of production, similar to the process on an assembly line, John Brombaugh oversees all areas of engineering, construction, and voicing (or tuning), thus ensuring total quality control. His organs are modeled after Above: These slender wooden linkages, the trackers, connect the keyboard to the pipe valves.

Below: A craftsman painstakingly gilds the lip of a pipe before its installation. The process was undertaken after the pipes arrived in Tennessee from Oregon.

Baroque-era instruments made in northwest Germany and Holland.

"That's why we chose John Brombaugh to build the organ," says Judy Glass, associate professor of music at the college. "He does the voicing of the organ personally, giving each pipe individual life and character. This is a very important step in bringing a tracker organ to its proper full throat."

Brombaugh is a rigorous and exacting engineer, according to Mrs. Glass, whose views are supported by current literature on the subject. Brombaugh holds an engineering master's from Cornell University and held his first job with the organ division of the Baldwin Piano and Organ Company in Cincinnati, trying to combine his love for music with his skill for mechanical design.

He created several electronic innovations for the company, many for which they still hold patent rights, but he became disillusioned with electronic organ music after listening to recordings of historic European organs.

He eventually decided to pursue the almost-forgotten discipline of tracker organ construction, and after apprenticing with several world-renowned builders and doing a six-month journeyman'ship with Rudolf von Beckerath in Hamburg, Brombaugh set up his own workshop.

The Opus 26 has more than a few unusual features. Its pipes, unlike most pipes today, are not composed of tin, but of lead. While in Europe, he had an old organ pipe analyzed and discovered to his amazement that the basic element was lead. In accordance with the Old World standards, his technicians forge their own lead pipes by hand in a small foundry located in his workshop.

The organ also carries a glockenspiel, or complete set of 36 bells, also operated by trackers connected to the keyboard.

The keys are covered by cowbone, which does not yellow with age as does ivory. The beautifully designed wooden housing for the organ is made of fumed white oak. The original wood carvings were executed by one of Brombaugh's staff specialists. Many of the large pipe openings and carvings are gold-leafed with 24 carat gold. The organ's longest pipe is 32 feet long, a posane reed pipe made of wood.

The Opus 26 was purchased in 1978 for $400,000 as a joint college and church project, but its current value has risen to $1.2 million. Considering that the organ has an estimated lifespan of 300 years (compared with the 40-year lifespan of most electric pipe organs), the investment is considered by many to be a sound one.

Not only will the quality of campus music instruction increase, but the church congregation will be blessed with musically enhanced worship services. And the organ's impact on Chattanooga's cultural community has already been felt. As a campus visitor commented while looking in on the installation, the Opus 26 will put Chattanooga on the map for fine arts development.

It took Brombaugh's staff of technicians six weeks to reassemble the organ in the church once it arrived by truck from Oregon. Brombaugh himself will live on campus for up to six months while he performs the most critical stage of assembly—individually voicing each pipe to match the acoustics in the church.

Plans call for a dedication ceremony and opening concert when the organ is fully voiced and ready to play, probably in late summer or early fall. John Brombaugh hopes to have some of the voicing complete in time for Bach's 300th birthday, which will be celebrated throughout the world on March 21. Up until that time, the congregation will be treated to hearing a few pipes at a time as work progresses.

In addition to the massive Opus 26, the college has also purchased a smaller Brombaugh creation, the Opus 27, for its music recital hall. The Opus 27 has two manuals, 13 stops, and is one of only six meantone tempered instruments built in the 20th century. It will be voiced at the same time as the Opus 26. ■

REGISTRATION

The lobby of Mabel Wood Hall buzzed with greetings as So-Ju-Conians registered there on Friday, Founders' Day, Alumni Weekend.

Lorraine Davis Fox, '43, of Ooltewah registers before paying a visit to the new Heritage Room in Mabel Wood Hall. About 250 So-Ju-Conians signed the guest book.

A handclasp, a wave, a refreshing of memories—the afternoon was a mixture of nostalgia and wonderment at change. Mazie Herin, '37, Rubye Sue, former staff member, and another guest are pictured.

Elder and Mrs. Clyde O. Franz traveled down from their retirement home in Berkley Springs, W. Va., for homecoming. He was a 1932 graduate and Lois Mae (Clark) graduated in 1934.

The So-Ju-Conian group, students who attended Southern Junior College (1916 to 1944), flocked in on Friday, November 2, for a head start on homecoming. With ceremonies marking the recycling of Miller Hall, the former music building, into quarters for the Division of Religion, the planting of a tree brought from the old Graysville campus, and other activities, the afternoon itself passed quickly into history.

AWARDS

Alumnus of the Year for 1984 is J. C. "Buddy" McElroy, Jr., '60, a hospital administrator in Meridian, Mississippi, and owner of Sumter Timber Company. He is a member of the Southern College Board of Trustees and a member of the Committee of 100. Because he could not attend the presentations on Homecoming Weekend, Buddy was honored with a plaque when the Board of Trustees met the preceding Thursday. After his conversion in 1958, he came to Collegedale for school. "This college had the greatest impact on my life," he said, when accepting the award.

Alumni of the Year Elder and Mrs. R. L. Odom illustrate the fact that former students of Southern College in all its phases, as well as graduates, are now considered alumni. Martha Montgomery Odom served as secretary to President Lynn Wood and graduated in 1924. Her husband attended but graduated elsewhere. A prolific author, Elder Odom has written over 20 books and edited "Message" magazine and much of the denomination's Spanish literature.

Young Alumnus of the Year is James Closser, '79, center. While his wife, Myrna looks on proudly, Dr. Jack McClarty reads the plaque. Jimmy is director of development and public relations at Madison Hospital.

"The Yellow House," the original home on the Thatcher plantation which was to become the modern campus of today, has been recaptured by painter Chester L. Varnell of Chattanooga. Unveiling took place after the alumni supper Saturday evening.

Love's Investment

Sanford and Martha Ulmer:
How two people turned a dream into a $10 million campaign to help students.

*from an interview with
J. T. Shim*

They're the spark plug that got this whole thing going," said President John Wagner, recounting Sanford and Martha Ulmer's role in the Century II Endowment Campaign.

At the pre-kick-off meal on November 1, Sanford Ulmer described the college's initial reaction to his brainstorm in 1982. "When I mentioned $10 million, the administration almost keeled over," recalled Ulmer. But he justified the figure, "You go for the amount that is necessary to do the job."

Sanford Ulmer was born in New Orleans in 1906. He finished academy at the Southern Junior College version of this college in 1923. (Ninety percent of students then were academy level, he remembers, with just seven two-year-college graduates that year.) Education and total expenses totaled around $750 a year in those days. He worked most of his way through at 25 cents an hour.

Ulmer stopped by the campus some 20 or 25 years after his graduation to pay his respects to "a very wonderful teacher, Maude Jones."

His next visit was four years ago. He and his wife, Martha, were driving down Interstate 75 on a trip from their Lansdale, Pennsylvania, home when he noticed the sign "Southern Missionary College." On a whim they drove over to Collegedale to take a look. And in Wright Hall they met Bill and Elsie Mae Taylor.

"We had an interesting visit in Mr. Taylor's office. I asked him question after question. All the time I was talking with Mr. Taylor, I began to turn over a little something in my mind." Before leaving, having no children of their own, knowing his own days of trying to work his way through, and finding out what tuition costs today, Ulmer asked, "Do you think the school might be interested in a small scholarship fund to help a few students get through school? I think you have enough buildings. I'm not interested in giving another dollar for a new building. I'm interested in helping students get an education."

A scholarship fund of about $15,000 was set up immediately (and later expanded considerably). And 15 students were selected to receive help the second semester of that year. (As far as Ulmers were concerned, criteria were: a student's need, seriousness about an education, desire to do some good in the world, and a healthy reaction to work. "Working was an absolute positive part of the whole thing.")

Asked if they wanted their name mentioned, they replied "Not particularly." They had no idea whether they'd ever see the students.

But the college forwarded letters of appreciation, "so expressive of their desperate need, their desire for an education at a Christian college, their appreciation—almost invariably the students considered it an answer to their prayers, just as if God had reached down and said, 'Here's some money.'" Martha remembers, too, that almost all expressed the desire to pass it on and, when able, to do something similar themselves. "This response from the students to what little we did for them at the beginning convinced us to go further," the Ulmers say.

And go further they did. After helping 50 or 60 students (selected by the college Loans and Scholarships Committee) over the next year or so, they realized that the need went beyond their resources. The Ulmers saw a solution. One day Sanford told the Board, "Beautiful campus, beautiful buildings, fine teaching staff—but you have one problem—the students cannot afford to come here. The solution is to create an endowment fund large enough so that there would be enough income from that investment to help a considerable number of students." In his mind, he recounts, "I pictured an absolute minimum of $10 million."

"That's an astronomical sum," adds Martha.

"It should be $25 million," Sanford counters.

"You will simply never accomplish anything big by thinking small," the retired businessman-salesman-land developer-builder continues. They developed the nucleus of their dream. Mr. Ulmer still remembers the skepticism on the faces of the Board when the $10 million plan was presented on February 15, 1983.

Undaunted, he told them, "It can be done. I know the money's available. We simply have to do the job of telling those who have it how badly

"... just as if God had reached down and said, 'Here's some money.' "

it's needed and telling them that this is one of the greatest privileges that they could ever have offered to them to be able to join in and to use their money and their savings for a cause like this. If they can think of a better thing to do with it, I would be the first one to tell them to do it. If not, use it for this purpose. Because they are investing in young lives, and that investment will go on and on and on as long as that person lives."

The Ulmers are quick to credit the Board with overcoming its initial natural shock and bit of hesitation. "I remember Al McClure saying that this was the most important challenge ever brought before the Board," says Ulmer. "They accepted it, they voted on it, they said they would give it their wholehearted unanimous support—and they have done so."

This past September Martha Ulmer was appointed as an honorary member of the Board.

Though Martha considers her appointment a real honor, she is more than a passive onlooker. At the November 1 Board meeting Mrs. Ulmer took seriously a match challenge announced to board members whereby their personal contributions up to $500,000 would be equaled dollar for dollar by a gift from a donor wishing anonymity. Further, another $500,000 raised by board members in the course of the 10-year campaign through personal influence, contacts, or personal funds, would also be matched.

"It was an exciting meeting," says Mrs. Ulmer. "Two million right there," and Mr. Ulmer's grin reflects his delight. Getting the ball rolling, Mrs. Ulmer personally pledged $100,000 toward the challenge.

"We agree wholeheartedly that probably nothing we could have decided to do could give us any more satisfaction than what we are doing now," asserts Ulmer.

At the insistence of others, the Ulmers are both members of the Endowment Fund Committee, chaired by J. Wm. Henson III. "We're kind of a package," says Martha. On that select committee are "people who will not accept failure under any circumstances," says Ulmer.

More Ulmer philosophy: "If you can come out of college having learned four things, you're on the way to an education." Those four things? 1. Learn to learn. 2. Learn to think. 3. Learn to get along with other people. 4. Learn to communicate. "If you pick up those four things, you can go on from there. It may take another 40 or 50 or 60 years to complete your education. . . . My years here awakened my mind and gave me a love for good reading. I read from four to six hours every day and have for the last 40 or 50 years."

On the true cost of education: "The old saying is so true—If you think education is expensive, try ignorance. But students are probably paying only about half of the real cost of getting an education. For instance, all these buildings, built out of donations. If it weren't for that Committee of 100 these buildings wouldn't be here today. Practically nothing the students are paying today is going towards the walls, the roof, the equipment in these buildings."

On alumni responsibility: "If you attend a college, whether you are willing to admit it or not, you have put yourself under an obligation that you can never rectify except by making a contribution yourself when you are able to do so to help the next generation get that same education. You can say, 'Well, I paid my way through school and that's it.' You only paid about half of your way through school."

On Christmas Eve 1985 Sanford and Martha Ulmer will be celebrating their fiftieth wedding anniversary. But they give no hint of slowing down. "We've made our three-day drive down here every two to three months for the last four years. We will not back off until we're positive it's going to reach its goal. Right now our priority is this drive. We're going to do all we can to keep up its momentum and see it succeed." ■

College Name to Remain the Same

By November action of the Board of Trustees, the school's name will be left unchanged: Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists.

After hearings, surveys, and other input, the committee appointed last year to review the college name returned a report favoring the retention of the present name. That recommendation was accepted by the Board and it was also voted to use it in its full form on all printed materials generated by the college.

"We sense a growing acceptance of the name adopted in July 1982, and with this decision now reaffirmed, work will proceed on developing a new logo and achieving uniformity in all new stationery orders, roadside signs, and publications," said Dr. John Wagner, president.

"Now that we've gotten the name settled, we are ready to move on into our second century of ministry to the youth of this church," he added.

FM90.5 Defines Future Format

A shift in radio station FM90.5 WSMC's programming, activated New Year's Eve, culminates months of careful study by the station board.

Prompted by the conviction that FM90.5 is a missionary arm of the Seventh-day Adventist Church, the station plans to sharpen its tools of proven missionary technique by consistently providing excellent service in an area of community need: fine arts broadcasting.

The classical format of the future will be interlaced with a selection of brief inspirational messages both throughout the week and during the Sabbath. This is expected to actually increase exposure to Christian principles of living, though the gospel music programming on Sabbath (often tuned out by much of the listening audience) will be reduced.

"The Adventist community will still be able to hear many of their favorite programs," Todd Parrish, program director, assures listeners. The Voice of Prophecy, Focus on the Family, Focus on Living, Quiet Hour, It Is Written, ARN Dialog, Your Story Hour, and The Sound of Worship (the local church sermon) will still be found in the Winter 1985 schedule, though perhaps at a new time. The station publishes FM90.5's Radio Guide, a quarterly listing of programs. It is available free of charge to listeners.

"Our mission has been defined as twofold," stated Olson Perry, general manager. "We provide training for students in broadcasting, and furthermore, we represent Southern College to the greater Chattanooga community by providing a musical, informational, and inspirational public radio service."

Statement of Mission, Perry elaborated: "Because concentration of appeal is a necessary principle of effective broadcasting, FM90.5 defines its listeners as being those with a specific interest in the arts. The station will serve them seven days per week with a format of classical music, significant information, and inspirational messages. Maintaining a mutually harmonious tone among these three areas will give unity to our total programming package."

FM90.5 WSMC, on the air since 1961, is the oldest non-commercial station in the Chattanooga area. A charter member of National Public Radio since 1970, FM90.5 has as many as 10,000 regular listeners for the NPR programs "Morning Edition" and "All Things Considered." The station anticipates continuing to carry these programs through the week with the exception of Sabbath.

While recognizing that many people are far from appreciating classical music, FM90.5 has discovered that the thought-leaders of the Chattanooga community tend to be among its listenership.

Classical music selected for the Sabbath hours will be chosen with special care, Parrish promised. "The listener will be able to enjoy the same type of great music that would enrich a church service or would enhance the Sabbath experience in some other way."

Study is being given to the possibility of also operating a parallel sub-carrier station for subscribers in the immediate area who would enjoy hearing campus speakers, camp meeting sermons, and other programs of interest to the Adventist community. "Community interest and financial support will factor in the consideration of this option," indicated Perry.

Endowment Campaign

Good Progress Toward $10,000,000

The Century II $10 million scholarship endowment campaign officially opened on Saturday night, November 3, before an audience of 2,500 alumni, friends, and constituents.

"Over $5.6 million in cash, pledges, and challenges are in hand to open the campaign," said Dr. John Wagner in his announcement. A 10-year time frame in which to achieve the goal has been set.

"I truly hope the goal can be reached ahead of schedule," declared William H. Taylor, campaign director. "I talk to students, and I know their financial needs can't wait 10 years. I'd like to see all $10 million producing scholarships before our centennial in 1992."

Works by Three Professors Go to Press

by Sherry Dike

Teachers read books; teachers research books; and some even write and publish them. On the campus of Southern College are several faculty who have recently mastered the challenge of authorship.

Dr. Gordon Hyde, who for 10 years served as the director of the Biblical Research Institute and who is now the chairman of the Division of Religion, has a new book just off the press. The Gospel of the Here and Now is a devotional book written to serve as a companion to the 1985 first quarter adult Sabbath School lessons, which he also authored. The book adds insight to the themes and events recorded in Mark's gospel.

The 1985 Sabbath School Lesson Quarterly will be the first of an entirely new series. In 1982 Dr. Hyde was asked by the Sabbath School Council to lead the way in introducing a 10-year sequence of studies that will cover the Scriptures entirely. "How Christ Meets Human Needs" is the title of the first quarterly. Mark's gospel was chosen to open the new 10-year program because it speaks of man's hopes, fears, and anxieties, and deals with current issues.

Dr. Hyde has been the author of two other adult Sabbath School quarterlies and for each he has written an accompanying book, God Has Spoken and his best-remembered book, Rags to Righteousness.

Dr. Hyde has already started on his next writing project. He has been asked to write one section in Volume 11 of the SDA Bible Commentary, designed to cover the fundamental beliefs of the Seventh-day Adventist Church.

Dr. Jerry Gladson, SC's professor of Old Testament studies, has just sent his book Who Said Life Is Fair? to the press. The book deals with the life of Job and was written at the request of the Review and Herald. Dr. Gladson had already written a teacher's quarterly on Job, and so he began a chapter by chapter commentary in 1980, delving deep into theological reflections about the problem of evil. The book is not written for a technical audience, says Dr. Gladson, but for the common person. He hopes it will be used in college religion classes or in church settings.

Dr. Gladson is now working on a second book, titled The Bible Primer. This will be a complete study-it-yourself guide to the Bible.

In the history department, Dr. Benjamin McArthur, associate professor, has recently seen the publication of a revision of his doctoral dissertation. Entitled Actors and American Culture, 1880-1920, it is part of Temple University Press's American Civilization Series.

Dr. McArthur's book studies the social role of the actor during the golden age of the American theatre, the years when Edwin Booth, the Barrymores, and Joseph Jefferson were household names. It is not a study of plays or acting techniques, says Dr. McArthur, but a study of the relationships of actors to the wider American culture. McArthur finds that actors sought social respectability through the emulation of the learned professions. They formed professional associations and tried to formalize actor training, but ultimately the players' social role depended on their status as celebrities, the models of modern life whom we see exalted today.

Dr. McArthur researched his book in Chicago and New York, then made the necessary revisions for publication during his first five years on the staff at Southern College. The college's word processing center provided essential help in the preparation of the manuscript. McArthur's next project is a study of a former University of Chicago president, Robert Hutchins. ■

New York City Awards Southern College Volunteer Group

What relationship do a glass apple and a Thanksgiving dinner have?

Last spring Ed Lamb, associate professor of social work and family studies, attended an awards dinner in New York City. On behalf of scores of Southern College students, he accepted the Volunteer Award - 1984, presented by the Salvation Army in New York. It was one of only three such awards made this year.

The glass-apple-adorned plaque represents a gift of caring and a gift of time—1500 Thanksgiving Day hours shared with the homeless and hungry who come to the Salvation Army to celebrate the day of feasting. This is the eighth year that behavioral science students have participated in serving dinner.

"Invariably students say, 'This is the best Thanksgiving I've ever had,'" states Lamb. "The down-and-out dinner guests like to talk to our students. It's a real positive experience for all of us."

This year the group worked with the Salvation Army at the U.S. Armory and at the Salvation Army branch in Harlem. Other years they have served in the Bronx, the Bowery, or Midtown.

The social service experience on Thanksgiving Day is but one facet of the intensive and highly educational schedule students followed on their nine-day jaunt. While 33 art appreciation students from Southern College toured some of the world's greatest galleries and museums, the 37 behavioral science students visited ethnic areas and observed urban change.

As in previous years, they spent a morning with "Mama Hale," who gained recognition in the September Reader's Digest and the November 18 issue of Parade for her selfless care of over 480 babies born to drug-addicted mothers.

All 70 of the students and their sponsors stayed at the YMCA in Manhattan for their budget visit in the Big Apple. The total tour cost $210 plus meals and provided a well-earned hour of Directed Studies credit for the social work or sociology student and two hours of credit for Bob Garren's art students, in conjunction with orientation classes and quizzes, journals of observations, and, for upper division students, annotated bibliographies or research papers.

"It was a great experience that I wouldn't have missed for the world," commented one of Lamb's students in retrospect. ■

SOUTHERN PEOPLE

■ With the addition of two more names, the emeriti list for Southern College now includes 10 former faculty members.

R. E. Francis, B.D., was named by the SC Trustees at their March 12 meeting as professor emeritus of religion. He taught here full time from August, 1960, to December, 1978, and still resides in Collegedale.

At the same time, Cyril F. W. Futcher, Ed.D., was voted the honorary title of vice-president emeritus of academic administration. Dr. Futcher retired in Collegedale the second time, after being recalled to his administrative post in 1982 for a two-year period.

Other emeriti faculty are Dorothy Evans Ackerman, Theresa Rose Brickman, Olivia Brickman Dean, Charles Fleming, Jr., K. M. Kennedy, H. H. Kuhlman, Evelyn Lindberg, and Drew Turlington.

Charles Whidden

■ Charles Whidden has been appointed manager of the Village Market, one of the three entities at Southern College which constitute Commercial Auxiliaries. Mr. Whidden comes from Tampa, Florida, where he was employed for 22 years in management for five different stores with the Publix supermarket chain.

President John Wagner cuts the cake at the surprise birthday celebration in his honor at lunchtime November 1. To the right is J. T. Shim, Student Association president, who helped throw the party. In the background is E. O. Grundset, who chairs the programs committee. Mike Palsgrove, SA executive vice president, presented Dr. Wagner with the gift of a Chicago pneumatic 1/2-inch impact wrench on behalf of the student body. Board members as well as students, faculty, and staff were on hand to enjoy the chocolate cake. On his actual birthday, October 21, Dr. Wagner was out of town.

He began working at the Village Market on November 1. He and his wife, Jewel, have a son and daughter-in-law, Bruce and Christine Whidden, attending Southern College. Two daughters and another son live in Florida. The Whiddens also have four grandchildren.

■ Dr. Ray Hefferlin, professor of physics, traveled to the People's Republic of China this month to confer with scientists interested in the same field of molecular research.

Lectures were scheduled in Shanghai, Hefei, and Bijing. The major portion of his December 3 to 16 visit involved intensive conferences with two scientists at Hefei who have been studying the same area as Dr. Hefferlin and his SC students, for about the same length of time. Contact was established in March of 1984.

The research area consists of the construction of periodic systems of molecules. It is known among scientists as "pure" research, meaning that it has no immediate application other than contributing to our understanding the basic plan of the universe.

On December 21 Dr. Hefferlin reported at the International Conference of Pacific Basin Chemical Societies in Honolulu. Two Southern College students, Ken Priddy and Erin Sutton, are co-authors of the Hawaii report.

■ Bulimarexia was the subject of a one-day workshop held November 27. Dr. Marlene Boskind White, of Freeville, New York, spoke for student assembly as well as leading out in other presentations. Health service personnel and other staff attended not only from Southern College but from other educational institutions in the Chattanooga area. Dr. White, a practicing psychotherapist, earned her Ph.D. in counseling at Cornell University in 1977. She has been involved in research and treatment of eating disorders for over seven years, and has co-authored a book, Bulimarexia: The Binge/Purge Cycle. The presentations were sponsored by the Southern College Student Health Service in cooperation with Student Services.

■ Lady Caroline Cox of Great Britain visited the campus November 5. A leading authority on education, the Baroness was touring the United States under the auspices of The Foundation Endowment, a non-profit organization which addresses issues of interest on both sides of the Atlantic. Lady Cox spoke to the faculty at 4 p.m. and in the evening told students of her trips behind the Iron Curtain to take medical supplies into Poland.

■ One hundred forty students graduated Thursday afternoon, December 13. Of that number, 59 completed baccalaureate majors and 81 received associate degrees.

Commencement speaker was Dr. Calvin B. Rock, president of Oakwood College. Class officers were Douglas Gates, president; James Gershon and Deanna Wolosuk, vice presidents; Renee Middag secretary; and Reg Rice, pastor. Valerie Dick Boston, Deanna Wolosuk, and Karen Peck graduate summa cum laude. Three others graduated magna cum laude, and 12 graduated cum laude.

Stewart Crook

■ Stewart J. Crook has been named associate vice president for development at Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists.

In his new role he will be working closely with the Century II Endowment Campaign, with its $10 million objective for student scholarships. Elder Crook will be visiting and soliciting, working with volunteers, and presenting workshops related to financial planning.

He previously taught music at Southern (1964-68) and attended school in Collegedale. He graduated from Collegedale Academy in 1951, and took college classes from 1951 to 1956. He received a B.S. degree from Madison College in 1957, and his M.S. from the University of Tennessee in 1962. In addition to his trust services and music experience, he has been a dean of men, principal, youth director, and pastor.

Mrs. Crook, the former Shelley Martina Martin, is an accountant. Their three daughters, Delby Louise West of Altamonte, Florida; Shelley Marciann Robertson of Louisville, Kentucky; and Jodi Lynne Crook of Nashville, all graduated from Southern College.

Academy students not only learned particular gymnastic moves but also how to "spot" the moves, providing protection from possible injury and promoting confidence for the gymnast.

■ In early November the Division of Health, Physical Education, and Recreation hosted an intensive acrosport clinic.

Directed by Coach Ted Evans, the gymnastics workshop drew from 13 academies which had been represented in previous years and from five new ones. Oakwood College also sent a team. Southern College has been sponsoring the gymnastics workshops every other year, alternating with music workshops.

Steve Elliot, above left, from the University of Nebraska, was the master clinician. He is a world champion in acrosports. Hours of practice Thursday and Friday were crowned with a spectacular performance on Saturday night which brought together routines by the various teams. Stands were packed and spirit was high.

The Heritage Room

A Window to the Past

by Gary D. Howe

Through the years the personality of this campus has been formed through the fusing of leadership and cooperation given freely by many people—faculty, students, supporters. How the college arrived where it is today is vital to its future.

So that the rich history of Southern College will not soon be forgotten, the college is in the process of putting together a Heritage Room. It is currently located on the second floor of the new music center, Mabel Wood Hall. During the 1984 homecoming, the Heritage Room displayed numerous items, including a trunk, a student's desk, and a typewriter from the Southern Junior College era.

The preparation of the display was coordinated by Dr. Edythe Cothren, a 1931 alumna, who served as registrar and music and secretarial teacher from 1929 to 1933. Dr. Cothren and a small group of alumni put many hours and much energy into the gathering and organizing of pictures, furniture, and other items to display in the Heritage Room.

"Through the coming weeks and months, further work will be dedicated towards the growth of the Heritage Room's contents so that the room will eventually include items that stir memories for each and every alumnus who sees them," commented Dr. Cothren. Even those who are not alumni of Southern College can find in the Heritage Room a reminder of the dedication invested in this college through the years.

The college recently received a significant donation from the wife of a former president of Southern Missionary College, Kenneth A. Wright (1943-1955). Mrs. Wright, who presently lives in Avon Park, Florida, included in her gift many photos and records pertaining to the college during her husband's years as president. Among them are two plaques which can be seen in the Heritage Room. One was a thank you signed by the 1943-44 faculty when permission was granted by the General Conference Committee at the spring council in Chicago, for Southern Junior College to become a senior college. The entire faculty met President Wright at the Collegedale stop on the railroad to present the document.

Twenty college presidents have preceded the current one. The Heritage Room will help recall their contributions, as well as preserve a peek into the past through heirlooms such as these. The Alumni Office is grateful to each donor.

The second plaque commemorated the naming of the administration building after President Wright when it was completed in the late 1960's. It matches the plaque still mounted at the front entrance of Wright Hall.

Though many items that record the history of Southern College have been preserved, the collection is by no means complete. The college welcomes donations from its alumni and friends who may have interesting items to share. The address for such donations is:

Mr. William H. Taylor
Director of Alumni Relations
Southern College of SDA
P.O. Box 370
Collegedale, TN 37315-0370

The Heritage Room is open at present by appointment only. Those wishing to visit it are invited to contact the Alumni Office in Wright Hall. ■

THOSE WHO GAVE

UPDATE

Following an update to the "Those Who Gave" listing in the Summer 97 Columns First Quarter issue.

These lists of contributors to Southern College of Business-day Advertisers include some corrections and the addition of names of people before 1969 and of new donors during that interval of 1964. The listing in the First Quarter issue was cumulative from January 1, 1932, to December 31, 1983. Alumni donors who were again born with January 1, 1994, and June 30, 1983, are not listed again.

The Alumni Association and the college library, staff and students express appreciation to each donor whose name is listed here as well as thousands listed previously who were that support over the years.

At Rest

SCOTT JEFFREY YANKELEVITZ, 21, a junior business major from Brookeville, Maryland, died October 24 of head injuries suffered on campus that afternoon when he fell from a skateboard. A memorial service the following day in the Collegedale SDA Church evoked touching tributes from several of his many friends. A group of 30 students and five faculty members traveled to Maryland for the funeral on October 27.

"He was warm and sensitive... but the characteristic I admired the most was his unfailing dedication to his friends. His silent influence and leadership brought me through many trials," wrote fellow student Jerry Russell in memory of Scott.

Scott was born January 28, 1963. His immediate family are Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Yankelevitz and an older brother, Bruce. ■

FLORA DORTCH MOYERS, Graysville Academy graduate, passed away August 6, 1984, five weeks into her 100th year. A native of Tennessee, she had lived in Keene, Texas, since 1941.

Flora Dortch was born July 3, 1885, in Springville, Tennessee, and began studying at Graysville at the turn of the century, when she was 15. After some time as a student, Flora began teaching at Graysville and in 1905 married Samuel Moyers. Records show that he taught agriculture at Graysville and studied at Southern Training School. Their son, Carl, was born in 1908.

Just as the family prepared to move to Keene in 1919, Samuel died. Flora and her son went on to school at

Photos kindness of Claude Dortch

Keene anyway, and then together took their final year of college study at Union College in 1931-32. She stayed on to teach in the demonstration school in Lincoln, Nebraska. Carl went to Loma Linda University but died suddenly halfway through his medical studies.

Mrs. Moyers moved back to Keene in 1941 to care for her parents and to teach in the church school. Pastor Cree Sandefur, one of "Aunt Flora's" many students, commented, "Her magnetism drew young people to her. They left her presence with new ideas and enlarged ideals." ■

CLAIRE GRIMSTAD LIEN, executive secretary of the Southern College Alumni Association before her retirement in November, 1981, died

August 19, 1984, at her home in Collegedale. She had served the Alumni Association for about eight years, and had been named an honorary alumna in 1982 in recognition of her work.

Born in Minnesota, Claire was preparing for the teaching profession when she met Jerry Lien, a hometown boy. He joined her in the Adventist family, and on June 16, 1937, they were married. After teaching in public schools for some time, they attended Union College, where Claire studied secretarial skills. Later she studied medical transcription.

When Jerry entered the ministry, she used the piano, organ, and chalk art to enrich evangelistic meetings. She was intensely interested in children's Sabbath School work throughout her life. Claire's incredible courage and profound faith inspired many in her recent years of ill health.

Her son, Jerry Dick, lives in Collegedale. Her two sisters are Evelyn Herrmann and Florian Lee and her brother is Duane Grimstad. Burial was in Collegedale Cemetery, following services at Valley View Chapel of Lane Funeral Home on August 22. ■
